The latest iteration of Bitdefender brings three main editions for users to choose from such as Antivirus Plus, Internet Security, and Total Security. While the Antivirus Plus is designed to appeal to the security needs of most day-to-day users, the second, the Bitdefender Internet Security suite, is specifically aimed at users who desire more protection for the online environment, adding a lot of useful features to the already feature-packed Antivirus Plus. Comprehensive security suite for the online world Bitdefender Internet Security's main window looks almost identical to that of the basic suite. Once installed, Internet Security offers a few useful recommendations to its users via the AutoPilot feature. From the Dashboard section, users can effortlessly launch quick scans, open the VPN, activate SafePay banking protection, as well as install Internet Security on other devices. Users can also add a "quick action" in this menu, meaning that they can pin features that they use the most to the dashboard. Underneath the Dashboard, on the left-sided menu, there are three more important pages appropriately

How will you protect yourself and your family in the event of a cyberattack? How well do you know your security options? Do you know what is out there? Whether it's ransomware, data breaches, or another threat, how do you know whether you've taken the proper precautions? How can you get ahead of the next threat? The full list of known threats, and the potential damage those can do, is nearly endless. But a cyber attack is only one of the possible dangers you face. There are many more threats out there, and the average family knows very little about them. How would you react if you discovered that your computer was infected with malware? How would you know that your private information was compromised? Is your family protected from identity theft? How would you know if someone was taking advantage of your household accounts? Cyber-risks are real and serious. Protection Plans The average person does not understand what kind of risks they're taking, or how to react to those risks. Protecting your computer and your family is a serious responsibility that most families are unprepared for. To help you better understand these risks and your options for protecting yourself and your family, Security IQ has a new security protection plan. Security IQ gives you access to information about your potential cyber-risks and the potential dangers to your household, and shows you how to protect yourself and your family. Your home-based Internet router may not be your most-secure computer in the household. A security-aware, low-cost Internet router may do a better job of protecting you and your family from cyber threats. Do you know what kind of data flows through your router? What is the risk of it being infected with malware or infected with keylogger? Are your household's online accounts safe? How do you protect yourself and your family? You may not know the answers. Your accounts and passwords could be your most valuable data on the Internet. From your credit-card number to your social security number, banking account information to your email accounts - we store much of our personal information online. We make a big mistake when we assume that those accounts are safe. Do you know what kind of information is stored online and how that data could be stolen? What about identity theft and cybercriminals? How do you protect yourself and your family? If your computer is infected with malware, your privacy and security could be compromised. How do you know? You may not know the answer. We've all heard about the hundreds of dangerous cyber
