El Tri Unidos De Camisetas De Trompetas Cover CDs The.Q: retrieve table values in bash I am writing a script in bash which connects to a db in mysql and retrieves records from an existing table. What I want is to retrieve all the values from a particular column of table say "createdOn" in the same row and store them in a variable. Also how can we join multiple tables using "select * from"?? A: You can do it using mysql command or using bash commands. Expected sql query is select * from table1 where colum=value; and this should return multiple rows, try it as res=$(mysql -u -p -h -D -e"select * from table1 where colum=value") and you will get all the records from table1 updated answer for your new question You can do it in bash way, like for i in $(mysql -u -p -h -D -e"select * from table1") do done Q: MATLAB function inside Lua script I'm trying to run some MATLAB functions inside Lua scripts, and i'm very new to this. However, I couldn't figure out how to make it work. The problem is that all of the MATLAB functions are not exported to the Lua environment (if i manually put the function in the Lua script they will be known). I tried making a dofile and define the functions inside that, but that gave me an error that the function was undefined. function md_mat_to_argv(file_name, hmd_model) clear all % create a new argument vector new_argv = argv(1) + hmd_model.G
